Written Exercise (last 10 minutes)

If you were writing an article that had the opportunity to reach the world and reach the youth of Detroit what would your two most powerful sentences say:

You are bright, beautiful, caring and genius, all the solutions are inside of you.
Everything in life comes from systems, and we the oppressed people have the power to change those systems through collective action.
Transformation starts in the heart and flows to the thinking, what ever your heart says, let it flower in your thinking and create a renewed loving, peaceful, beloved community.

You are not what you own, where you live, who your friends are, but you are the things you consume, think and do.
Create the culture that sustains you – own it share it.

This is your city. DO NOT STEP ASIDE.
You are a world culture and a world people.
Detroit Youth are alive!

They are the beautiful and brilliant Black and Brown people representing some of the most vulnerable of our violent and misguided society, yet the greatest sense of hope for leadership and positive societal change to redirect the ills of poor generational transfer.

Life is more than just merely surviving; one must live with purpose. You have nothing to lose.

The young people of Detroit, by their working class and black origins, are connected to the majority of people on the planet. With and through this connection, the young people of Detroit will create the new program and organizations to build another world without racism, without class oppression, free of want and war.
